You asked:

What is the current waiting times for a cortisone injection from the physiotherapy department?

Our response:

The Physiotherapy department do not operate a standalone service for corticosteroid injections. This may be an adjunct to a patient's physiotherapy treatment and although we do have some physiotherapists trained in undertaking corticosteroid injections as a treatment option, as patients are not referred or accepted for a standalone injection, we do not routinely collect this specific waiting times data and are therefore unable to provide.

However, we can confirm our current average wait for a routine first physiotherapy appointment is 4-6 weeks.
